UK Outlook for Thursday 13 Jan 2022 to Thursday 27 Jan 2022:
Unsettled conditions are most likely through much of the period with spells of rain interspersed with drier but still showery interludes. Strong winds likely at times. Early in this period there is a chance of a spell of cold weather bringing a greater chance of snow particularly to northern regions. However, near or above average temperatures are the most likely outcomes. Through the end of the period there is a greater chance of some more settled spells developing, particularly across the south. This would increase the likelihood of overnight frost and fog.
